By now, you've probably heard that Google is building a network of supercomputers, connected by fiber optic cables, to crunch the data from all of America's big phone conversations. It's been a boon for big data research that's sure to be even bigger. The researchers are also creating a giant data hub for all the other systems Google is building for itself.

Source: Wired..xlsx For the other cases where the gene expression (i.e. the transcript of the gene, in the case of DNA) is not directly quantitatively assessed, a comparison between the two independent measurements of gene expression is recommended. The quantitative differences can be explained as reflecting differences in how the proteins are regulated during the development of the cell by different metabolic processes. In this case, differences between the two independent measures of transcript level can be interpreted as reflecting the different degrees of transcriptional regulation within the same gene by different developmental processes. One must keep this in mind because the quantitative differences, which are based on individual gene expression comparisons, should not be used to estimate the levels of gene expression by means of protein level or transcript level comparisons between similar or related genes because differences could be related to a number of factors such as transcriptional repression of the protein in question and/or differing amounts of the gene transcription factors, which are regulated based on the levels of the respective transcription factors (see e.g. [16]). The relative transcript differences can be seen by comparing the two independent measures of transcript level or transcript level relative to the corresponding protein level.
